Background:

Cecilia Roussel's sometimes uneasy relationship to cycling became (almost!) second-nature with her move into Seattle's bicycle-friendly infrastructure in the fall of 2011. A recent graduate of the University of Michigan's Master of Architecture program, she holds a long-standing conviction in the significance of design to our experience of the built environment. She commutes daily along the Burke-Gilman and hopes that everyone will someday enjoy a commute as embarrassingly blissful as hers.

Cecilia was born in Honduras to an American mother and a French father, and has moved both Stateside and internationally ever since. After design and biking, she enjoys growing edible plants, teasing her dog, and exploring a new-found passion for waste management through her volunteer work as a Master Composter/Soil Builder.
