Authority (Ord., Res.): SMC 3.64 and City Planning Commission		Term of Office: From: Confirmation To: September, 1 2014

Background:

Maggie is a policy analyst and researcher at Puget Sound Sage where she focuses on land use policy, affordable housing policy, transit oriented development and community-based planning. She has researched and written about the connection between sustainability and job quality, the implications of the region's changing demographics and the importance of racial justice in policy making.

While at Sage, Maggie co-authored Transit Oriented Development that's Healthy, Green and Just: Ensuring Transit Investment in Seattle's Rainier Valley Builds Communities Where All Families Thrive. Maggie has a B.A. in Sociology from Seattle University.

At Seattle University, Maggie focused her research on community-based ethnographic research on gentrification and displacement in partnership with the Central Area Displacement Network. Maggie hails from Portland, Oregon. She is happy to share her perspective as a young queer woman and advocate for people with disabilities on the planning commission.
