Mr. Marseille's passion is to deliver creative high performance building solutions to clients—solutions that are practical, maintainable and resource-responsible. An author of numerous published papers and frequent speaker, Tom is the managing director for the WSP Seattle office. He is proud to be a member of a practice that boasts numerous regional and national awards for high performance building designs. Tom focuses on sustainable design consulting, HVAC design, delivery of best-in-class building performance outcomes, system simulation modelling, total cost of ownership (life cycle cost) analysis, capital asset assessment and planning, and renewable energy applications.

Active in the design community, Tom is a member of the USGBC/ASHRAE/IESNA jointly-sponsored technical Committee that published the first ANSI-accredited high performance green building standard. He is a member of the Cascadia Green Building Council Board of Directors and serves on Seattle's Living Building Pilot Program Technical Advisory Group. Formerly, he was a member of Seattle's Green Building Task Force, a board member for the International Living Future Institute, has served as technical reviewer for Washington State energy efficiency legislation (E2SSB 5854) and Washington and Seattle Energy Code. He was a moderator for the AIA+2030 Professional Series in Seattle in 2011 and 2012.

Tom has a diverse technical background that underpins his current mechanical sustainable design focus and helps foster the integrative thinking such work demands. Examples include:

- While at Stantec Consulting, he led a team of assessors that was hired by the U.S. Green Building Council and ultimately provided assessments of LEED submissions on nearly 400 buildings.
- As a Senior Research Scientist for Pacific Northwest National Laboratories, Tom developed methodology and helped implement a comprehensive energy baseline and efficiency resource assessment for Fort Lewis to support an energy retrofit program. He performed assessments documenting the environmental benefits, tradeoffs and cost impacts associated with improving IAQ and replacement of CFCs in the overall U.S. building stock. He also was a project manager and technical contributor to the lab's Thermal Energy Storage and Integrated Building System's development programs.
- As a Director at Honeywell, he led a 50+ person globally-dispersed team in the development of the technology, analytic techniques and business processes needed to collect, store, analyze, aggregate and deliver enterprise wide actionable energy information to private and public clients, some with literally 1000s of buildings.
- As an engineering consultant in Chicago, he integrated a sophisticated life cycle cost methodology into pre-design and conceptual studies, performed energy assessments for a diverse client base, and provided facility assessments and energy performance contracting services for capital renewal and conservation acquisition. He also assisted clients with combined heat and power (CHP) applications, utility demand side management programs, and district cooling and heating strategies.
