Tool libraries provide a community resource where members can share resources at no or very low cost, increasing community access to valuable resources. There are three other tool libraries in Seattle, but none is easily accessible to residents of Southeast Seattle. Tool libraries can support community projects and encourage sustainable activities such as backyard gardens, home energy improvements, food preservation, and water harvesting. A tool library in southeast Seattle would provide greater access to tools and instruction in the use of those tools to low-income residents of the Rainier Valley and surrounding neighborhoods, building skills in southeast Seattle.
