TESTIMONY ON REOPENING OF PINE STREET, given to Seattle City Council 12-13-1994.

I am Linnea Hirst, speaking for the League of Women Voters of Seattle, as Chair of the League's Land Use Committee.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak to the issue of Pine Street. We would like to use that opportunity to reaffirm our long-held position to keep the street closed and thus keep Westlake Park a single, integrated space for pedestrian use. That position in no way means that we are opposed to the proposed Rhodes/Nordstrom project. The problem is the connection currently required by Nordstrom.

The Pine Street issue has been much in the news since Nordstrom tied its reopening to the major redevelopment plans for the retail core. Yet, nothing in all those news articles gives us hard data with which to revisit our League position.

Yes, Frederick & Nelson's has closed, and I. Magnin's, and Woolworth's, too. But in all three cases, the closures were part of company-wide closings, for company-wide financial reasons. It was bad luck for Seattle that those companies had stores in our retail core.

Besides reading news articles, we have read the City Engineering studies on downtown circulation and on the Pine Street closing, and we have read the study of the Nordstrom project proposal done for the Downtown Seattle Association. None of those studies points to a need to open Pine Street to traffic.

I'd like to take a moment to look at the Downtown Seattle Association study. Table 2 of that study focuses on Seattle's market share of taxable retail sales in 1978, 1983, 1988, and 1993, and shows, as we all know, that Seattle's share of the region's sales is declining. But, if instead, we look at those Seattle retail sales numbers taken alone, we find:

- Department stores - decreasing (by 6.5% between 1988 and 1993)
- Apparel/Accessories - increasing (by 30% between 1988 and 1993)
- Miscellaneous Retail - increasing (by 30% between 1988 and 1993), and
- Total Retail Sales in Seattle - increasing as follows:

1978 - 1983 by 26%
1983 - 1988 by 20%
1988 - 1993 by 28%

It seems to us, therefore, that the sales numbers for Seattle don't even show that the retail core is in trouble, but only that the City's proportional share of the region's sales is declining. That decline makes sense, given the population growth in the greater metropolitan area during those years.

NOTICE: IF THE DOCUMENT IN THIS FRAME IS LESS CLEAR THAN THIS NOTICE IT IS DUE TO THE QUALITY OF THE DOCUMENT.

But, if the numbers are for all of Seattle. Can we use them to make assumptions about the downtown? Are there specific facts and figures about downtown? Does anyone have those figures? Where are the studies?

Let's get to the issues. The argument "Open it." "No, keep it closed." doesn't argue, or invite real solutions. Why do Nordstrom and some other retailers want the #7 bus, for example, no longer stops within the block? Is it because "undesirables" frequent the area? Is it because "undesirables" frequent park? If the retailers could give us some issues to address, we could figure out some solutions. "Open it" is not an issue, but only a free-floating point of view.

Please, Seattle, let us figure out what the real problems are, and then go about solving them in a thoughtful, logical—and public—manner. And, may we add, with the show of genuine respect for the viewpoints of others.

Thank you.

Dear Seattle City Council,

The Washington Coalition for Transportation Alternatives (Alt-Trans) would like to declare its opposition to the proposal to re-open Pine Street between Fourth and Fifth Avenues. We feel that the street should remain closed for the following reasons:

- Westlake Park as it currently exists is a well-utilized park that offers the only opportunity in downtown Seattle for shoppers, tourists, workers and citizens to congregate and relax without the danger of traffic.
- Pedestrian areas are essential for a healthy downtown region. Re-opening Pine street would be a major set-back to addressing the need for adequate pedestrian access downtown and would provide a negative example for the entire Puget Sound region.
- The proposal to re-open Pine Street to traffic is based on the opinions of a single business interest and is not supported by any research of the issue.
- According to a study conducted by the City of Seattle's own Engineering Department, the closing of Pine Street has not adversely affected downtown traffic flows.
- Rather than encouraging more driving into the downtown area, the City of Seattle should look to the promotion of transit (lower fares rather than free parking, more bus lanes, etc), traffic enforcement (motorist violation of pedestrian rights, illegal parking, etc.), and generally improving the pedestrian environment.
- Judging by hundreds of conversations that members of our organization have had with shoppers in Westlake Park, we feel that re-opening Pine Street will have a detrimental effect on businesses in the area.

Attached to this letter we submit to the Seattle City Council and to Nordstroms over 1300 signatures of shoppers of the Westlake area who are opposed to the re-opening of Pine Street.

Sincerely,

David Broustis
