Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Legislation Title: A RESOLUTION proclaiming Seattle to be a Human Rights City in celebration of the sixty-fourth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Summary of the Legislation: On the occasion of the sixty-fourth anniversary of the signing of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, and the thirty-seventh anniversary of the City of Seattle's celebration of Human Rights Day, the City of Seattle seeks to reaffirm and deepen its commitment to promote human rights by proclaiming Seattle a Human Rights City and adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a framework for incorporating human rights standards into laws and policies.

Background: The United States endorsed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, and the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

The United States has ratified or signed other numerous international human rights laws and standards. Together, these declarations and laws provide a valuable framework for strengthening and improving the impact of laws and policies on local communities and work on their commitment to protecting, respecting and fulfilling the full range of universal human rights, including civil, political, social, economic, and cultural rights. Universal human rights principles work to ensure that the dignity, equality and well-being of all people are respected and protected. These principles are the foundation to the American tenets of fairness and opportunity.

The City of Seattle has long been committed to promoting human rights as demonstrated by the creation in 1963 of the Seattle Human Rights Commission "to act in an advisory capacity in respect to matters affecting human rights" and make recommendations "with regard to the development of programs for the promotion of equality, justice and understanding among all citizens of the City" as well as recommend policies "affecting civil rights and equal opportunity."

Thirty-seven years ago the Seattle City Council recognized December 10th as the official date for commemoration of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In addition, the City of Seattle implemented human rights principles in its policymaking, as demonstrated by actions such as the Race and Social Justice Initiative, a citywide initiative to address racial and social disparities and achieve racial equity; and the Ten-Year Plan to End Homelessness in King County.

The idea of a "Human Rights City" developed to provide a model for municipal government to translate and implement universal human rights principles at the local level.

A "Human Rights City" consciously aspires to respect, protect and fulfill universal human rights as spelled out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the human rights instruments enumerated in the Human Rights City Resolution.
