Why do you want to become a member of the Seattle Youth Commission? For the past two years, I have done hundreds of service hours with organizations that exposed many social justice issues in our communities and promoted youth empowerment. I am very passionate about making my community, and soon, the city, a better place for its people and the generation that will succeed it, as a collective. After my work with organizations such as Powerful Voices and the Washington Bus, I've learned that there are very few young people, especially young people of color thoroughly involved in political affairs. I want to change this, and the Seattle Youth Commission is my first step. The program will give me the skills, knowledge, and connections that I need to better myself as a community leader so I can educate my peers and uplift my city.

What issues are you passionate about in your community, and why? I am very passionate about teen homelessness in Seattle, and homelessness in general. I feel that it is our responsibility as a community to provide a safe place for youth until they are able to support themselves. Having to fend for themselves prematurely will be the gateway to choices such as drug use, theft, violence, dropping out of school, etc. I am also very passionate about providing a quality public education and plentiful opportunities for youth. Personally, I've had been in classrooms where I had to share calculus books with classmates that were tattered and missing assigned pages, and lacked after school support that was scheduled at a time that also allowed me to participate in other after school activities. I would also want to emphasize the importance of community service in schools and have more youth involved in politics
