Comments:  New Appointment  Ryan's upbringing was distinctly Southern, growing up in a small town in Northeast Louisiana in a Southern Baptist family. Ryan joined the armed forces. Even though he knew that would mean having to compromise who he was, he still felt an obligation to serve his country. He enlisted into the United States Navy and served very proudly. Ryan learned the importance of being out and open about who he was and realized that he did not want anyone to have to go through the experience of not being true to themselves. He knew that something had to change.  In the hope to find a more positive environment for the change he sought, he left the South for Seattle where he found his partner, Anthony Hoang. Still having that passion and drive pushed him into more proactively seeking change he could be a part of. The search brought him to Out in Front, an outstanding program that helped him gain leadership skills and a better understand the LGBT movement and how he could make the change he was yearning for many years.
