Background:  Magdalena is passionate about design which facilitates the interaction between individuals and place and supports community needs. Her professional work combines her interests for ecology, collaborative research, and community design. Before coming to the Seattle area, she volunteered for the Colorado Center for Community Development—a program which offers affordable, professional design and planning assistance to small rural communities. Since moving to Seattle, she has received a Master of Architecture and Master of Urban Planning at the University of Washington. While attending the UW, she participated in the Neighborhood Design Build Studio. As part of a team, she designed and constructed small community projects for Wellspring Family Services and El Centro De La Rasa In 2011, Magdalena joined Berger Partnership and spent the summer researching urban agriculture for an internship report called Productive Neighborhoods. The research documented existing urban farms in Seattle to better understand how urban farms function and instigate a discussion about how to expand urban farming into Seattle's food system as a reliable food source. When out of the office, she can be found in her backyard attempting to translate her urban agriculture research into practice.

Park John and Virginia Sproule Endowed Architecture Scholarship (2010)

Charles Winthrop Lea III Memorial Scholarship (2009)

I am fascinated with the design of public spaces, which facilitates the interaction between individuals and place and evolves over time to suit the local needs of a community. I combine my passions for ecology, collaborative research and community design into my work approach and I am enthusiastic about projects which synthesize multiple scales and transcend disciplinary boundaries.

Before joining Berger as a staff member I spent the summer of 2011 researching urban agriculture for an internship report called Productive Neighborhoods. When out of the office, I can be found outside attempting to translate my urban agriculture research into practice or exploring Seattle with another one of my interests, photography.
